On the other hand, balanced pronouns are more often used in the relationships made by students. The results are found by Puspita Darmawati, the presence of gendered terms and pronouns in written responses made women and younger speakers more feminine than men, and older respondents of both genders used relatively neutral, omnivorous language of identity, whereas the younger females placed the first names with female names. From Darmawati & Chandra, 2010, in press, Gender and Pronouns in Indonesian Discourse.
